Interprofessional Learning Day
Thursday November 13th, 2008

Interprofessional Learning (IPL) has gained the attention of governments, health professionals and educators, accrediting organizations and professional bodies as a key strategy to enhance collaboration between the professions and improve the quality and safety of patient care.

But what does this mean for universities as they prepare students for future practice? How can IPL be incorporated into health and social care curricula? What is the evidence base for IPL?

This 1 Day Interprofessional Learning Symposium brings together national and international experts in the field of interprofessional practice and learning to explore these questions.

This symposium aims to stimulate debate and challenge current thinking around educational practice and is therefore relevant to all health professionals and educators with an interest in IPL.
